Sneak Peek - Postmaster General Louis DeJoy Addresses National Postal Forum Attendees

Postmaster General Louis DeJoy discusses the state of the Postal Service on September 20, 2021 – the first day of the Fall virtual National Postal Forum. Register now to learn more about the purpose of the Delivering for America Plan, how it is successfully transforming the Postal Service into the future, and how the plan will deliver for our customers. A preview of this interview is available online now HERE. The full discussion is only available to NPF attendees.

In addition to this news magazine style interview, PMG DeJoy discusses other key components of the plan and current business activity with senior USPS officials. Executive Leadership Team members provide in-depth analysis and information on USPS capital planning, peak holiday season planning, postal product and service updates and much more. The Postmaster General also has an in-depth conversation with industry leaders from the PCC Advisory Committee.

The 2021 virtual National Postal Forum (NPF) takes place September 20 – 22, 2021, with insightful content from USPS leaders. Along with three officer- led sessions – one hour discussions on logistics, security and technology - 21 general workshops on postal products and services, and industry trends, attendees will have the opportunity to network virtually. Additionally, day two features key marketing platforms designed to grow your business. Content will feature a deep dive on USPS Connect, groundbreaking technology solutions, and what USPS is doing to enhance mail programs. Register today for access to this content and much more throughout the three-day event. To register directly, CLICK HERE.

Attendees will have access to information for thirty days after the event and will be able to provide their organizations with insights and planning for the upcoming mailing and shipping season. With the new NPF virtual platform, attendees have the opportunity to view hours of programming at their convenience.
